Future of the Abraham Accords

Introduction

In 2020, the United States facilitated a series of landmark accords between Israel, the United Arab Emirates (UAE), Morocco, Bahrain, and Sudan, marking a historic shift in Middle Eastern and North African geopolitics. [i]

House. This was quickly followed by similar agreements between Israel and Bahrain, Morocco, and Sudan. The Abraham Accords included the exchange of ambassadors, the opening of embassies, and collaboration across various economic and security sectors, symbolizing a strategic realignment in regional relationships. These accords paved the way for enhanced economic, cultural, and strategic partnerships.

Background

The announcement of diplomatic ties between the UAE, Bahrain, Morocco, and Sudan with Israel elicited mixed reactions globally. Leaders within the region welcomed the potential for increased engagement, others viewed it as a betrayal, arguing it undermined of the agreements also voiced concerns about the continued marginalization of the Palestinian cause and its potential impact on the broader Middle East peace process by fragmentating the Arab bloc and delaying a resolution on the core issue. Palestinian leaders and citizens feared that the normalization of economic deals might lessen international pressure on Israel to address longstanding grievances. Beyond the Middle East, the agreements sparked
